Wildlife artist Cynthia Fisher is nuts about animals. Everything in her world revolves around her love and admiration for all wildlife, which is aided by her college studies in zoology and wildlife management. She chooses to share this love with her vibrant colorful paintings and scratchboards of species from all corners of the world, most of which she has travelled to, including 19 trips to Africa (so far!) Cynthia has been a professional wildlife artist for 35 years, adding bronze sculpture, glass mosaics and mixed media sculpture to her repertoire.

Cynthia’s list of artist accomplishments includes 17 duck stamps, many times featured artist for the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation and Ducks Unlimited, artist of the year for the Safari Club, and many others. She is a board member for the Society of Animal Artists, member of the Oil Painters of America and International Scratchboard Society, and makes her home in Hamilton, Montana, surrounded by her subjects: moose, elk, deer, bear, and trout.

“Everything I do centers around animals. I strive to create realistic and accurate portrayals, some of which tell a story. I don’t usually copy photographs, but create my own unique composition that compliments what I’m trying to depict. I believe my collectors are looking for one of two things: a piece of art that represents a memory or a wish. And I love being able to fulfill that for them!”
